

Obesity drug injections maker Gerresheimer expands capacity in US

The company is investing around 166 million euros ($180.24 million) in the construction of two buildings, creating 400 new jobs in Peachtree.

London: German drug vial maker Gerresheimer on Monday announced an expansion of its U.S. production site as it sees growing demand for weight-loss drugs, including of the GLP-1 class.

The site produces autoinjectors, which can be used in diabetes and obesity therapy, such as Novo Nordisk's Wegovy and Eli Lilly Zepbound, among other medical devices.
